A Dog Fight and a Question of Law. A few days ago our friend Hines, the tailor, who

Rosa Madiai, embodying a statement of the offence is a very nice man, and who has a nice large glass for his customers to look at themselves in those nice coats, which he makes to fit them in the most superb' manner, happened with the following adventure :-A negro boy, belonging to Counsellor Clopton, was sent to Hines' shop by his mistress, and accompanynize proselytism as a crime punishable by the civil ing him was a large, and, what Davy Crockett would call, were he alive, a remarkably rantankerous dog; who was absolutely growing rusty and dyspeption for want of a fight. Now this dog, as he walked deliberately into the shop, and with the most dogand embrace the religion which they call Evangel- matic gravity surveyed the surrounding objects, saw what he verily believed to be a first rate chance for a small bit of a brush; at least enough to keep his blood in circulation. For immediately before him, and as bad off for a fight as himself, was another huge dog, whose size, make, and weight, just matched him to a T, and the two together presented as handsome a sight as the most critical of the fancy could desire. So, when Ponto-we don't know the name of Counsellor Clopton's dog, but we might as well call him Ponto as any thing else-we say, when Ponto saw this elegant opening for a morning's exercise, his heart leaped for joy. He bristled up, showed his teeth, and placed himself along side his or ponent, in the most approved fighting attitude .-Neponto-that we will suppose is the name of the other dog-Neponto did the same. Ponto growled, so did Neponto. Ponto smacked his jaws, so did Neponto. Ponto turned himself around to get a better position, ditto Neponto In short, whatever Ponto did. Neponto did precisely the same thing. Now, ordinarily, Ponto was a dog of a very commend ble character for patience and forbearance, but he hadn't had a fight in three days, and he was decidedly in a bad humor. And this way of being mocked, and his actions so exactly imitated by, what he thought, an ill-looking cur, he couldn't stand -He determined, therefore, to take signal and exemplary vengeance upon the bold offender. Once more he straightened his back, showed the whole length of his enormous tushes, & made a spring-a terrib 6 cause of it, Ponto did not stop to inquire. It was a way of fighting that he never heard of in his youngout, and fled towards home as if be was followed by a thousand Chinese gongs, and decidedly the worst whipt dog that Ponto himself ever met with.

Thus ended the dog fight, and the only question now to be decided is, who pays for the looking glass. Tuskeegee (Ala.) Rep.

An Irish Duel and Verdict.

My Dear Harry-I must potspone every other topic to inform you that on Friday last a duel was fought between Harry Flood and Mr. Agar, the elder in Dunmore Park, near Kilkenny, in which Mr. Agar was unfortunately killed. As Mr. Flood was not the challenger, and as it was out of his power to avoid it, he has nothing to reproach himself with. The cause was a case of pistols belonging to Mr. Agar, which one Keogh lost at Burn Church, in the riot about ten months ago. I hear that the unfortunate gentleman had often asked Mr. Flood about them, who always said 'that he had them not, and was not accountable for them.' But on Friday they produced a challenge, to my great surprise, for if there were any offence, it was as much an offence any day these ten months as it was on that day. They stood at about fourteen yards asunder. Before they fired, Mr. Agar questioned Mr. Flood about the pistols, in a threatening and offensive manner. Mr. Flood answered very deliberately: 'You know I will not answer you while you ask me in that manner.' Mr. G. Bushe, who was Mr. Flood's friend, said something to Mr. Agar to induce him to ask in another manner, and not to bring such an affair upon himself so needlessly; but without effect. He laid down one pistol, and rested the other upon his arm to take his aim. Both Mr. G. B. and Mr. Roth, his own friend, called to him to fire fairly .-N. B. Besides the unfairness of using a rest, it was particularly unfair at that time, for Mr. A. had proposed they should stand alongside a quick set hedge, out Mr. Roth declared 'there should be no leveling.' Upon their calling out he desisted, and took another posture, and fired first and missed. He then took up his other pistol, and then said to Mr. Flood, 'fire, you scoundrel.' Mr. Flood thereupon presented his pistol, which he heid all this time with the muzzle turned upwards and shot Mr. A. through the heart. Mr. A.'s left breast was towards him, Mr. A. being left handed. He expired in a few minutes, without speaking anything articulate. The Coroners have found the verdict specially-that he came to his death by a pistol bullet,"
